3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

US TO RELEASE PARTIAL TRANSCRIPTS OF ORLANDO KILLER'S CALLS TO POLICE

Federal officials will on Monday release partial transcripts of three phone conversations the man who killed 49 people in a Florida gay nightclub last week had with police as the massacre unfolded, Attorney General Loretta Lynch said on Sunday. Lynch, speaking on CNN's "State of the Union" talk show, said the Orlando shooting incident was "an act of terror and an act of hate", but she declined to say what charges may be filed nor who may be charged in the case. The transcripts of the conversations between deceased gunman Omar Mateen and law enforcement negotiators will "talk about what he told law enforcement on the ground as the events were unfolding," Lynch said. SUPREME COURT MAY TAKE ACTION ON STATE ASSAULT WEAPON BANS

2 The Supreme Court may weigh in this week on gun control, an issue smoldering again following the June 12 Orlando massacre, with the justices due to decide whether to hear a challenge by gun rights advocates to assault weapon bans in two states. The Connecticut and New York laws prohibit semiautomatic weapons like the one used by the gunman who fatally shot 49 people at a gay nightclub in Orlando in the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history. The Supreme Court will announce as soon as Monday whether it will hear the challenge brought by gun rights groups and individual firearms owners asserting that the laws violate the Constitution's Second Amendment guarantee of the right to bear arms. RECORD HEAT SPARKS WARNINGS, BOOSTS FIRES IN WESTERN US

3 Fire warnings were in place across three western states on Sunday as record-breaking heat threatened to feed wildfires that have blackened thousands of acres, especially in California and New Mexico.
The National Weather Service said temperatures of 120 degrees were possible in southwestern deserts through Wednesday. "Red flag warnings" for potential fires covered an area stretching across southern California, southern Nevada and southern Arizona. "These extreme temperatures can be life-threatening," the weather service said on its website. The high temperatures have joined with a prolonged dry spell to worsen the fire threat. REUTERS

Who doesn't crave a day at the beach? This week's weather should be perfect for it. GETTY IMAGES

BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: BORED WEATHERMAN = HAPPY PEOPLE

Hey, it's always nice to have a great stretch of weather, especially in the Northeast, because the winter has a tendency to add stress to our already stressed-out lives.

Who doesn't crave a great day at the beach, a beautiful hike in the mountains, fishing in your local lake or in the vast open waters of the Atlantic, a barbecue or a cold brew on a hot day without the weather screwing it up?

It's much easier to stroll around without the cumbersome umbrella or getting splashed by a passing car or bus. I still want to chase the bus or car and say, "What the hell?"

Nothing is worse than getting all the kids together, loading up the beach gear — chairs, blankets, towels, food, and grandma — unload everything and then 10 minutes later a line of storms sends everyone scrambling for cover and cursing out the weatherman. Ah yes, the joys of summer.

Right now I'm bored, weatherwise, and that should make you happy, because I don't see any extremes in weather this week. The tropics are a bit active, with possible storm development in the Yucatan Peninsula and into the southwest Gulf of Mexico, but it would most likely move into Mexico.

The Northeast will be warm for the early part of this week, followed by a cooler and dry air mass for the second half of this week. Temperatures could kiss the 90 degree mark for Philadelphia and New York City on Monday and Tuesday. Boston will remain below the 90 degree mark.

The best chance of showers and scattered storms this week for all three of the Metro cities will be late Monday night or Tuesday morning. If you planned your vacation for this week, you picked a good one.

By the way I hope all the dads had a super Father's Day.

Central Boston Elder Services
Your Connection to Care.

Dear Friends,

Since the recent Orlando terror attack and hate crime, I've been waking up with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on my mind and wondering where exactly is our society headed. What happened to the dream? Are we at the mountain top?

Dr. King always said that we are all God's children. Therefore, should we not emulate God's grace, mercy, wisdom, and love?

He spoke of the good man, the great man.
He talked about traveling down the Jericho Road, of its winding and meandering, its dangers, its challenges and the need to travel such roads to ask the right questions of ourselves.

Unfortunately, today I feel we are fearfully walking parallel to the Jericho Road while forgetting the dream. Presently we are faced with discrimination, hate, violence and rejection based on who we love in our community which doesn't help us in reaching the mountain top.

Dr. King posed the question:
"The right question is not, if I stop to help, what will happen to me? But instead, If I do not stop to help what will happen to that man?"

Our brothers and sisters are suffering and along with it humanity.
During his era, Dr. King spoke of threats, and what would happen to him. He wanted to live a long life, but was not concerned, because he believed his work was God's will.

He promised we would get to the promise land. I ask you, are we there yet? If not, then why?
I suppose not.

Brothers and sisters, I see no color, no gender; I love you no matter your sexual orientation. If you hurt, I hurt, if you bleed, I cry for you, if you are sad, I cry for you.
Today, I cry for the Orlando Victims. Will you cry with me? Will you travel the Jericho Road and ask yourself the right question?

On behalf of the Board of Directors and employees of Central Boston Elder Services, our hearts and prayers go out to the victims and the families of the Pulse Night Club shooting.

Olympians unfazed by reports of turmoil in Brazil ahead of Summer Games

NYC, Boston, Philly athletes looking forward to competing for gold, not the risks.

ERIC GIRARD

Selected in 2009 as the first South American country to host the Olympics, Brazil faces huge hurdles on the eve of the Rio Games this summer

There's the mosquito-borne Zika virus epidemic, prompting some health officials to call for postponing or relocating the games, lest it infect athletes who could spread it around the world. The virus has been linked to a fatal brain defect in babies born to infected mothers.

Megan Hodge Easy

Then there's the political crisis, the economic crisis and the environmental crisis. Crime is soaring, and, on Friday, the governor of Rio declared a "state of calamity," saying the state's government is bankrupt and can't meet its financial obligations for the games.

Well, you get the picture. All isn't well with less than two months to go until 10,500 athletes from 200 countries and a half-million spectators descend on Rio and the Olympic cauldron is lit Aug. 5.

One of those athletes is Philadelphia native Glenn Ochal, 30, who's on the eight-man rowing team. He won a bronze medal in London in 2012 and sees an opportunity for gold this year. Having rowed all over the world, he is not intimidated by the reports of garbage and sewage in the bay where sailing and windsurfing competitions will be held.

"A few American rowers became ill, but none ill enough not to compete," he said of an incident last year when 15 Americans got sick after a rowing championship on a Rio lagoon. "You watch what you eat and drink, keep yourself clean."

The Zika virus also doesn't overly concern him.

"We have a medical staff," he said. "We've been taking standard travel shots. My wife and I aren't planning on having kids soon, so I'm OK with Zika. We'll be smart. We're in the Olympic Village."

U.S. women's indoor volleyball team member Megan Hodge Easy, 27, of Boston, has a silver medal from London and is confident going into Rio. However, the Zika epidemic has Easy and her husband, Omar, wondering whether to bring their 19-month-old son to Brazil.

Otherwise, she is undaunted by the turmoil there.

"As an athlete traveling the world, you learn to adjust and adapt," she said. "We're not planning on getting pregnant anytime soon, so hopefully Zika won't be an issue. We're an indoor sport."

The Brazilian women won volleyball gold in 2008 and 2012, raising the stakes for Easy and her teammates. "We're there to get a job done," she said.

Tina Charles, 27, of Queens, New York, who played on the 2012 gold medal women's basketball team, is more concerned with winning games with the WNBA's New York Liberty than Zika.

"I haven't given it any thought," Charles said. "I'm sure USA Basketball will take the best precautions."

Another American athlete, cyclist Tejay van Garderen, who has a baby on the way this fall, has decided not to compete because of Zika. But it can't stop some in their quest for Olympic glory.

"It's something as a child you've always dreamed of," Charles said.

TOM FOREMAN
Opinion
CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

Both upheavals at home, abroad and even in the halls of power promise to make this week a wild one. Here are my three things to watch in politics.

1. GUN SHOW
Against the backdrop of another mass shooting, Congress will consider competing plans to reduce the violence. Four proposals have been forced to the floor by a Dem filibuster, but getting a vote and getting anything done are wildly different things. Capitol Hill statisticians say the odds are slim to none that anything substantial will be approved, and even if there is a win in the Senate it is likely to become a loss in the House. Who will be watching closely? Hillary Clinton. She berated Barack Obama in 2008 for supporting more gun control measures, but now she is convinced the issue will play in the fall — especially with her base.

2. SEARCHING FOR THE BREXIT
Every economy wonk in D.C. will have binoculars pointing across the Atlantic for the Brexit vote. If the Brits bail out of the European Union, shock waves may roll through international markets, and even Wall Street could get the shakes. Some are tossing around the "R" word — as in localized or even global recession fears. It's all very complicated and hard to predict, but the potential impact is real with consequences for your 401K ... as if it hasn't taken enough of a beating.

Hillary Clinton GETTY IMAGES

3. TRUMP UNPLUGGED
Two weeks ago Republicans were beating the drum for everyone to get behind Donald Trump. Now their presumptive nominee is tumbling in the polls, and some big-name GOPers are acting like they're desperately trying to end a bad blind date. Any attempt to dump Trump at the convention will be wildly risky, but you can bet we'll hear a lot more talk about that this week. Furthermore, I suspect GOP leaders will be putting new emphasis on the fight to keep the House and Senate, just in case the Oval Office can't be wrestled from the Dems. Campaign slogan? How about "Two Out of Three Ain't Bad!"

BRIEF

Obama immigration win at Supreme Court could benefit Trump
If the Supreme Court in the coming days decides a high-profile immigration case in favor of the Obama administration, the ruling could have an unexpected beneficiary: Republican presidential contender Donald Trump.

The Obama administration is asking the high court to revive its 2014 proposal to protect up to 4 million people from deportation, a plan that was blocked by lower courts. The court could rule that a president has broad authority to interpret and enforce federal immigration law.

Such a ruling would allow Obama to implement his signature executive action on immigration, aimed at the parents of children who are U.S. citizens, before he leaves office. It could also help Trump, who has put forth his own sweeping and controversial plans on immigration ahead of the Nov. 8 election.

"To the extent the court has language about the president's wide authority in immigration law generally, that would certainly strengthen Trump's hand," said Stephen Yale-Loehr, an immigration law expert at Cornell Law School.

Fort Point is still an artists' enclave

For three days this weekend, artists in Boston's Fort Point neighborhood opened the doors to their live-in galleries-slash-studios-slash-homes.

In this tumultuous time for the neighborhood, once an artists' refuge and now one of the hottest slices of real estate in the country, a small but passionate Fort Point creative class persists. The Fort Point Open Studios, which happens twice a year, is their showcase.

Inside The Artist Building at 300 Summer Street — one of several locations highlighted over the weekend — most of the artists in the building's 48 units have been living and working there since affordable units first opened in 1995.

One is Christina Lanzl, who works both as an artist and an art consultant and lives on the building's second floor. On display in her home on Sunday were a few hand-made metal end tables, an assortment of paintings and a wall of embossed aluminum wall hangings.

It's a rare privilege to have reasonably priced space in Boston like the home she's had for 21 years, she said, with its open floor plan and tall windows, and with lots of square footage to stretch out and work on her many projects.

"There's no way I could ever afford another place in Boston, ever," she said. "I would never find another space like this."

She credits the Fort Point Arts Community with having the foresight to buy the old industrial building and preserve the units for creators. FPAC also runs the 249 A Street Artists Cooperative, which has 44 units of live-work space.

Both are owned by the co-op, and space there goes for about a third of its market value. Those looking to move in have to get on a long waiting list, and new residents are chosen by a panel.

But walk around 300 Summer and it's clear artists who live there tend to stay, like photographer Jeffrey P. Heyne and his wife Dorothea Van Camp, a mixed-media printmaker, who live and work in a corner of the building's third floor, and were showing off scores of artworks on every available surface on Sunday for guests to browse.

They've also been there for more than two decades, Heyne said, and it's worked out well for them. At the same time, he said, it's not like there are many other comparable options for artists in a city that gets more expensive seemingly by the day.

"We're sort of locked in here from that standpoint," Heyne said, "We could go to another co-op if we wanted to. There are a number of them in the city here. I wish there were more of them."

300 Summer is not perfect. Repairs and improvements to the aging structure have led to fee increases for co-op members.

But there's much less chance that artists at 300 Summer will be priced out of their neighborhood altogether, like what happened over time to the many creative types who roamed the shells of the light-industrial structures a few decades ago, before it became an upscale playground of corporate offices and luxury condos.

Even General Electric's plans to move its headquarters to a spot down the street isn't seen as an existential threat for now, artists said.

So long-term resident Gustavo Soto-Rosa, a photographer, said he plans to stay in 300 Summer's gentrification-shielded bubble as long as he can.

He has more than 20 years of memories with his four-dozen creative neighbors, he said, and he isn't going anywhere.

"I want to be wheeled out of here for the hospital," Soto-Rosa said. "Feet first." SPENCER BUELL

How to plan a first date (based on how you met)

LAURIE DAVIS EDWARDS

Single and Swiping

Laurie Davis Edwards is the founder of eFlirt, an online dating concierge service, and the best-selling author of "Love @ First Click: The Ultimate Guide to Online Dating."

Twenty years ago, the methods of meeting a mate were simpler. You met in school, at the local hangout or were introduced through friends. Today, our access to dates has expanded and, with that, so have the modes of meeting. You could meet your next relationship in person, on the web or on an app. "Putting yourself out there" means being active in nearly all of these ways at once, but your approach to your first date needs to shift based on how you connected. Here's how:

When you meet IRL, you lead with chemistry. In those 10 or 15 minutes you spend flirting at a bar or an event, nonverbal communication speaks loudest. You leave knowing you're physically attracted to each other and have great chemistry, but in that short conversation, compatibility is still unknown. You go on a date to see if it exists. Do your values and common interests sync?

When you meet on a dating site, you lead with compatibility. Their profile explains their interests and values, like what religion they practice or their opinion on children. You know there's attraction via photos too, but you don't know if you have chemistry, so you go on a date to explore. Do you two have that je ne sais quoi?

When you meet on a dating app, you lead with attraction. You've seen each other's photos and swiped right, but you're missing two important elements: chemistry and compatibility. Your date needs to take meeting on an app a step further because you also need to determine if you are compatible in values and interests. Both questions from above should be answered on one date.

Regardless of where you meet, consider reframing "first date" as "meet up." It takes the pressure off, and reminds you to enjoy some sparks while waiting for fireworks.

Justin Bieber falls through hole in stage during concert

Don't you hate it when you're minding your own business, adjusting your pants, when all of a sudden you fall through a trap door?

That's exactly what happened to Justin Bieber, who took a pretty nasty fall in the middle of his concert last week. In what is likely the most talked-about event in the history of Saskatoon, Canada, the 22-year-old singer was absentmindedly walking down the stage while adjusting his ensemble when he tumbled through a hole at the end of the platform.

Don't worry, Beliebers — the Canadian pop star is totally fine. He even poked some fun at the incident, later tweeting a clip of the fall with the caption: "I'm a cat. I got 9 lives. Lol"

T.I.'s stepdaughter arrested for gun possession

If we ever got arrested, we can only hope that our mugshots look as good as Zonnique Pullins'.

Pullins, who is the stepdaughter of rapper T.I. and a former member of the girl group OMG Girlz, was arrested at an Atlanta airport for allegedly trying to bring a gun through airport security.

According to a police report obtained by People, the 20-year-old was arrested and charged for attempting to get through a security checkpoint at Hartsfield-Jackson International Airport with a .380 Ruger semi-automatic pistol in her purse. She was released early Friday morning.

Last month, a shooting that took place at T.I.'s rap concert in New York City left one person killed and three others wounded.

Though neither T.I. nor Harris have commented on the arrest, Pullins' cousin, Tamara Whitaker, took to Instagram to issue her own statement about the incident. She posted a photo of Pullins' mugshot, alongside a caption explaining the arrest and relating it to the shooting of Christina Grimmie.

"With the late shootings and death of a pop star all in Orlando just this week, I think it's very appropriate that she carries a gun just not to the airport maybe lol," Whitaker wrote. "Her mugshot is still cute as hell lol," she added.

Well, at least she got a cute mugshot out of it, right?

But when she meets Russell, the girls' charismatic, Charles Manson-like leader, Evie discovers there's a dark side to this utopia.

"Rich and Pretty" by Rumaan Alam

Female friendships are complicated. But somehow Rumaan Alam — a man — nails the tension, envy and intense love in this irresistible debut. Sarah and Lauren have been besties since middle school but now that the two are navigating their 20s in bustling NYC, something's changed. Do they even like each other? Gripping historical fiction

"Homegoing" by Yaa Gyasi

In her impressive debut novel, Yaa Gyasi (a mere 26 years old herself) deftly weaves the stories of Ghanaian half-sisters who have never met in alternating chapters: Effia, married off to a Brit to a life of comfort, and Esi, sold and sent to America as a slave. The shameful legacy of slavery on both Africa and America is examined in stories of the women's descendants, from the 18th century through the present day.

For a "Life's gonna be OK" memoir

HOW TO GET AHEAD

The simple secret to Apple's success

In his new book, creative director Ken Segall explains why simplicity sells.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

Can an iPhone be an allegory for career success?

Ken Segall, Steve Jobs' renowned advertising director and the creative force behind Apple's iconic "Think different" campaign, believes so. In his new book, "Think Simple: How Smart Leaders Defeat Complexity," Segall delves into what makes simplicity so powerful in the business world.

We spoke with Segall about how to distill an idea down to its essence, and why you don't need to be the next Steve Jobs — or even an entrepreneur — for his message to matter. You just need to be, well, the next you.

You wrote about how Apple's mission statement, "enrich lives," was key to its success. What's your take on personal mission statements?

A lot of people make things far more difficult that they need to be. I think people and businesses have a tendency to be so thorough and analyze and overanalyze that they sort of lose sight of the simplicity that is there for them to take ahold of and succeed with.

So I think in one's personal life, it can help to have a mission, and stay true to that. Because we may get offers along the way that aren't things we want to do, but we may get tempted by the money. Right before I became a writer — I was just a production guy at the time — one of the creative directors gave me advice that stuck with me forever. It was, "Only work at great places, only work on great accounts, do not worry about the money and everything will fall into place for you."

"Think different" was so effective. But it's deceptively simple. How did you know it would work?

I didn't come up with the words "Think different." That was an art director by the name of Craig Tanimoto. But it was all really just searching for that theme that would capture what Apple is about, because in those days, Apple was near bankruptcy and it was very tough times. We didn't have any new computers to sell, so it was more about telling the world that Apple was alive and well, Steve Jobs was back and things were going to change. We just tried to capture the spirit of the company.

I think the reason "Think different" works so well is because it described Apple all the way back to the days in Steve Jobs' father's garage. It was always about thinking different, and it continues to be. So it was very authentic. You can be simple about many things, but if you're being simple about something that you are authentically, it's that much more powerful.

True, all the CEOs you wrote about had a genuine sense of purpose. It's easy, in retrospect, to say they were visionaries and success was in the bag. But it's a different story when you still have to prove yourself.

If you look at the people who have really succeeded on very a high level, they're the people who created a culture at their companies and had that sense of purpose. I think it was striking to me, doing the research for the book, how many people played back a similar story.

The one I'm writing an article about right now is Ben & Jerry's. It's a good example for me because I always liked their ice cream. Their thing is all about values — about having a social conscience. Other companies make the same product, and don't have those values.

What did you learn from Steve about simplicity?

One of the reasons I try to psychoanalyze [Jobs] is he was basically his own boss at a very young age, he didn't really know any limitations. In my later years, if he wanted something, and I told him it couldn't happen, he didn't really accept that. If it came down to it, he'd say, " Well, if you can't do that I'll find someone who will."

So Steve really pushed you?

Yeah, he got people to perform beyond their own expectations, which is what a great leader would do.

What else should people know about the power of simplicity?

[In advertising] I was led to believe you need to create a well-balanced portfolio. [But] I think too many people try to be everything.

One of the warnings I received was that I'd be typecast as a technology guy, and I said, "Well, I want to be typecast as a technology guy." So I thought, 'That's my passion, why would I want to hide it among 10 other types of ads?" If you have that passion, then a company that has that kind of need will respond more positively to you.

Yes, a shorter workday is pretty exciting to us, too. ISTOCK

The case for the five-hour workday

Productivity tools have given us more time — but we're wasting it.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

Last June, "Shark Tank" champion and Tower Paddle Boards CEO Stephan Aarstol tried an experiment. He instituted a five-hour workday for all employees for the entire summer, beginning at 8:00 a.m. and ending at 1:00 p.m..The catch? Productivity had to remain steady. If employees couldn't hack it, they'd be fired.

It worked. Now Tower Paddle Boards has a permanent five-hour workday (and salaries remain the same, if not higher).

Aarstol makes a compelling case for a shorter workday in his new book, "The Five Hour Workday: Live Differently, Unlock Productivity, and Find Happiness" (out July 15). He explains why streamlining the workday is good for personal balance, and the bottom line.

The current workday is an outdated invention

When Aarstol began researching the origins of our standard eight hour workday, he realized "it was basically invented by Henry Ford in 1914 for factory workers. Because of the assembly line, productivity went way up."

The Digital Revolution created another productivity sea change — but our workday hasn't kept pace with the speed at which we work, says Aarstol. "As a knowledge worker, I'm just so much more productive today than knowledge workers were 100 years ago."

We don't always work at work

Despite a standard eight hours on the clock, we're generally only working two to three of those hours, says Aarstol. "Productivity tools [email, Dropbox, smartphones, etc.] have allowed us to be really productive, and they've allowed us to waste a lot of time. So we've sort of trained the workforce to become very lazy."

Our schedules are killing us, literally

Says Aarstol, "In the early 1900s, people were dying on factory floors because they were being overworked. Today, the same thing is happening. You see it with prescription medication abuse, you've got drug abuse, you've got obesity, you've got heart disease. A lot of this is from basically working too much."

Shorter workdays, savvier companies

Aarstol sees shorter workdays as a retention strategy to attract "those highly productive workers, and to give them a better bargain." If this appeals, Aarstol suggests picking up a copy of his book for your boss.

NBA mock draft | by Matt Burke

No. 1

76ers: Ben Simmons, SF

A few weeks worth of boredom always takes place in between the lottery and the actual draft. It happened this year as many pundits and Sixers fans questioned whether Simmons was No. 1 pick material. He always has been and still should be.

No. 2

Lakers: Brandon Ingram, SF

The same boredom happened with the Lakers and Ingram at No. 2. Ingram remains the clear-cut second best player in this draft. If the Lakers are patient and don't trade this pick, there's a very good chance Ingram will be the cornerstone player in LA for the next 15 years.

No. 3

Celtics: Jaylen Brown, SF

One way or another, expect the Celtics to make people raise their eyebrows here, either with a trade or by taking someone not named Dragan Bender, Kris Dunn or Buddy Hield. Brown could be the second-coming of Paul Pierce in Boston.

No. 4

Suns: Dragan Bender, PF

Everyone's screaming that Bender is the next Kristaps Porzingis simply because Porzingis is the last international lottery pick that we saw. No one has a clue on whether or not European players will work out.

No. 5

T-Wolves: Jamal Murray, SG

Great shooters are in vogue right now thanks to the Splash Bros. in Golden State, but getting two guys who can shoot like that on the same team is rare. Minnesota could use a shooter so it might be a good fit.

No. 6

Pelicans: Kris Dunn, PG

The Pelicans are still searching for that second star to place next to big man Anthony Davis. Dunn has been vocal about where he doesn't want to play (Boston and Phoenix) but he seems as though he may have a liking for the Big Easy.

No. 7

Nuggets: Buddy Heild, SG

The sharp-shooting Heild would fit in nicely with Danilo Gallinari, Emmanuel Mudiay and Kenneth Faried. Heild is the type of player who should be able to contribute right away and the Nuggets could potentially land in the postseason next year.

The rest of the picks

- 20 — Pacers: Malachi Richardson, SG
- 21 — Hawks: Thon Maker, C
- 22 — Hornets: Wade Baldwin, SG
- 23 — Celtics: Diamond Stone, C
- 24 — 76ers: Demetrius Jackson, PG
- 25 — Clippers: Juan Hernangomez, PF
- 26 — 76ers: Dejounte Murray, SG
- 27 — Raptors: Cheick Diallo, C
- 28 — Suns: Ante Zizic, C
- 29 — Spurs: Ivica Zubac,
- 30 — Warriors: Deandre Bembrey, SF Second Round
- 31 — Celtics: Ben Bentil, PF
- 32 — Lakers: Malik Beasley, SG
- 33 — Clippers: Damian Jones, C
- 34 — Suns: Patrick McCaw, SG

No. 8

Kings: Marquese Chriss, PF

Chriss has sky-rocketed up draft boards in the past few months and it's easy to understand why. At 6-foot-10, he might be the most athletic player in this year's draft as he runs the floor like a guard.

No. 9

Raptors: Skal Labissiere, PF

Legendary college coach John Calipari is hyping him up, but that's what John Calipari does with former Kentucky guys. Labissiere was highly unimpressive in his one season with the Wildcats, but he's certainly not done growing as a player.

No. 10

Bucks: Henry Ellenson, PF

Marquette star Henry Ellenson is compared to Brian Scalabrine and Brian Cardinal (two white guys) on NBADraft.net. This is because Ellenson is also white and looks like a Scalabrine/Cardinal love child.

No. 11

Magic: Jakob Poeltl PF

Poeltl is another player who runs the floor extremely well for a man his size (7-foot-1) but that basically describes all big men in the NBA these days. There's a reason guys like Kendrick Perkins can't get big contracts.

No. 12

Jazz: Deyonta Davis, PF

Davis looked limited at Michigan State as he rarely left the paint but he's shown he can step back and hit outside jumpers during workouts. The Jazz are guard-heavy so expect them to go with size when they make their first-round selection.

No. 13

Suns: Domantas Sabonis, PF

Everyone hopes this works out as Domantas' dad, Arvydas, was a pleasure to watch. The guy passed out of the post like no other. The big concern with Domantas is his lack of athleticism.

No. 14

Bulls: Bryce Johnson, PF

The Bulls could wind up going with a guard if they are to trade away Jimmy Butler and/or Derrick Rose, but when in doubt go with the best player available. That's Johnson, who was a rebounding machine for the Tar Heals last season.

No. 15

Nuggets: Timothe Luwawu, SG

Luwawu did a Q&A with DenverNuggets.com and said he doesn't like to compare himself to other players but did say that he likes watching Paul George play. He also likes when fans are crazy, "like in Serbia."

No. 16

Celtics: Furkan Korkmaz, SG

The Celtics need shooters like you read about and Korkmaz would help ail that situation in the Boston back court. The C's have plenty of guards who can guard and that's Korkmaz's weakness. Sounds like a good fit.

No. 17

Grizzlies: Denzel Valentine, SG

The difference between Valentine and Buddy Hield is that Valentine's Spartans were knocked out in the first round of the NCAA tournament and Hield's Sooners went to the Final Four. Winning does matter afterall.

No. 18

Pistons: Tyler Ulis, PG

Many mocks have Ulis sliding big time after a report that he had some issues with his hips. He's also only 5-foot-9. But talent wins out. Expect him to still go in the first round based on that fact alone.

No. 19

Nuggets: Taurean Prince, SF

The Hawks are said to be highly interested in Prince but we have Denver snagging him here at No. 19. Prince has a tough time creating for himself, which is worrisome for any player at this level.

Copa America: Things could get Messi for USA

The United States is seeking a berth to the Copa America Finals, but will have a true tough test as a big underdog against Argentina Tuesday. The match, which begins at 9 p.m. and airs on FoxSports1 will star Lionel Messi for the Argentines and takes place in Texas at NRG Stadium. Argentina is ranked No. 1 in the world while Team USA is 29th. GETTY IMAGES

Taurus Experience is the greatest way to learn. Get involved in cultural events, different philosophies or an entertaining social group in order to make new friends and learn something new.

Gemini Financial improvements will come through a partnership or changes on the home front. You will find a way to cut your overhead and get the most for your dollar.

Cancer Preparation is critical before you start new projects at home or work. An interesting offer will grab your attention. Adapt your schedule to take advantage of what's being offered.

Leo If you show off, someone will be quick to put you down. Make subtle changes that will help you get ahead. Don't let uncertainty lead to a costly mistake.

Virgo Physical activity will help you blow off steam. If you feel someone isn't being sincere, give yourself time and space to assess the situation. Build confidence and boost your morale.

Libra Someone with talents similar to yours will recognize your potential. Share ideas, form a partnership and set a budget. Don't let your emotions get in the way of a good deal.

Scorpio Pump up your energy and enthusiasm, and put your plans into motion. Your imagination and drive will ensure that you come up with a great money-making plan.

Sagittarius Bide your time, listen carefully to what's being said and weed out any information you feel is inconsistent or based on false data. Don't divulge your financial situation.

Capricorn Emotions will surface if someone disrupts your plans. Move forward swiftly, with or without the person causing you grief. Success will be yours if you follow through on your ideas.

Aquarius Carefully decide where you want to spend your time and money. Making changes at home or to your professional goals will be rewarding, but not likely to please everyone.

Pisces Put more emphasis on your personal and financial well-being. Helping others will keep you too busy to worry about situations you have no control over. EUGENIA LAST
